Introduction

Acquisition of Sanex by Colgate

- Colgate-Palmolive Co. (CL) has acquired Unilever's Sanex personal-care unit for about $940 million, to expand in deodorant and body wash overseas.
- Colgate has also sold its Colombian laundry detergent business to Unilever for $215 million.
- Sanex, which Unilever had to sell to fulfill the Legal obligations of EU Antitrust Laws, generated sales of about $260 million in 2009.
- The acquisition is Colgate's first since 2006 as Chief Executive Officer Ian Cook aims to expand into more profitable products.
- Colgate, which generates more than 80 percent of sales outside North America, will gain a foothold in key parts of the personal-care market in Western Europe as a result of the transaction

Asset Disposal by Unilever

- Unilever, which bought Sanex as part of its 1.2 billion euro ($1.7 billion) acquisition of Sara Lee Corp. (SLE)'s international toiletries unit, was forced to dispose of the brand by the European Union, which raised concerns about competition issues in Europe.
- Combining Sanex with the company's Dove and Rexona brands would "likely have led to price increases" in seven countries including the U.K. and Spain, according to the European Commission.
- Sanex also drew interest from Procter & Gamble Co and Henkel AG, people briefed on the discussions said this month. Unilever didn't want to sell the business, because Sanex was the brand it wanted most, according to the people.
- Colgate will pay all cash for the shares and net assets and expects to close the acquisition by the end of the second quarter.

- Colgate is planning to expand its portfolio of brands that can help Colgate increase its competitive strength.

Colgate needs research support in taking the decision.

Market overview

Introduction to the market

- The world market for deodorants registered growth during the years 2008 and 2009, albeit at a slower rate than in previous years.
- With the recovery from the financial crisis in 2010, the market is projected to post healthy growth in the coming years driven by manufacturers increased focus on delivering technologically advanced products in various novel product formats.
- In addition, rising demand for gender-specific products is expected to enhance market prospects.
- Further, growing population, increasing awareness and rise in disposable incomes among consumers in developing regions including Asia-Pacific and Latin America would contribute to enhanced deodorant sales.
- Deodorants is a matured market in developed regions such as the US and Europe. In these markets, delivery of innovative products and an improved product mix play a vital role for manufacturers to increase their revenues.
- Producers are more or less compelled to offer innovative products that deliver quick, effective protection against odor and wetness.
- Deodorant producers have sought to generate sales growth by relying on product introductions on a continuous basis as well as product line extensions.

Europe Market

- Europe represents the largest regional market for deodorants worldwide.
- Europe along with the US collectively account for a major share of the global deodorants sales.
- Demand for deodorants in Europe as well as the US reported a moderate drop during 2009 because of economic slowdown that forced consumers to cut down spending on certain avoidable products such as deodorants.
- Deodorant Market can be further segmented into aerosol sprays, non-aerosol sprays, and squeeze-bottle sprays. Aerosol Sprays constitute the largest as well as fastest growing product segment of deodorants in the world.
- Stick & Solid Deodorants category represents the second major deodorants product segment.
- The personal care category is witnessing a strong growth trend as a result of the increasing focus of men towards grooming, hygiene and appearance. Male oriented products are growing briskly, surpassing the hitherto women dominated cosmetics and personal care market.
- With regard to fragrances, men choose deodorants over the luxurious perfumes which are preferred by females. This has provided a definite impetus to the overall sales of deodorants.
- Another major trend in the deodorants market includes the shift towards more natural products. The increase in awareness about the benefits of natural products, led to a rise in demand for deodorants using herbs and botanicals. Botanical ingredients such as cucumber, aloe vera, lemongrass, and green tea are increasingly being used in deodorants to lure health-conscious individuals.

Key Strategies and Operations

- Invest in Basic Products - Unilever is a global leader in categories which are generally described as commodities -examples include deodorants, bath and shower, shampoos and conditioners. Moving on, as the economic situation improves, these categories continue to have benefits as they have a much wider appeal for consumers in emerging markets.
- Leverage Economies of Scale - Unilever has consolidated its operations in terms of manufacturing, procurement and other relevant activities and intends to take full advantage of this. It aims to invest in products that can work globally rather than just in a few countries.
- Maintain Diversity - Unilever intends to focus on basic products that work globally, it still wants to maintain a diverse portfolio to accommodate different market conditions.
- Increased Competition - While Unilever has performed well with its compact and focused approach to growth, it faces increased competition in the market. L'Oréal and Beiersdorf are identifying areas such as deodorants and body care, overlapping with Unilever. Moreover, Unilever faces competition from more competitively-priced private label.

Market Assessment

Unilever's Deodorants Share Grows

- Unilever is by far the market leader in deodorants, with an over 31% global share in 2009. The company's closest competitor is Procter & Gamble, with a 10% share.
- In the US, its largest deodorants market, Unilever launched four new deodorants each supported by substantial media advertising, marketing campaigns and promotions.
- Unilever has captured the deodorants market by offering interesting products, a slew of launches and products that appeal to a wider consumer group, supported by heavy investment in advertising and marketing.

- The markets to lead growth in absolute terms for deodorants are Brazil, Germany and India, all of which are led by Unilever, and the company is in a good position to benefit from the growth opportunities
- Unilever is the market leader and its position is unchallenged, but strategic moves by its competitors could put the company under strong threat.
- Deodorants is a strong category for Unilever and it should continue to spend on product development to beat the competition and keep its strong category leadership.

Category and Geographic Opportunity

- Deodorants is Colgate-Palmolive’s fourth largest category in beauty and personal care, but the company’s sales are predominantly derived from the US market, at nearly 30% of its global category sales. However, the US is projected to grow only marginally, by US$51 million, over 2009-2014 compared to US$548 million for Brazil, the highest in the world.
- The two other leading markets to drive growth are Germany and India, where Colgate-Palmolive does not a significant presence.
- Deodorants is projected to post robust growth and a few companies in the industry are expanding their presence in this category with the launch of products with additional features or breakthrough technology. Both Beiersdorf and L’Oréal have launched deodorants within the natural/organic niche, but Beiersdorf has gone a step further stating that it has formulated a technology to control stress-induced sweat with its deodorants. Strong product launches combined with effective marketing campaigns can ease the competitive pressure for Colgate-Palmolive.

World Beauty and Personal Care value share (2009)	3.7%
World Beauty and Personal Care value growth (2009)	6.1%

Key Strategies and Operations

1. International expansion - Colgate-Palmolive’s success in building a strong emerging market profile has helped its oral, personal and home care business weather the global financial storm, at least to date.
2. Product innovation based on scientific study - As part of its ‘winning on the ground’ strategy, Colgate-Palmolive aims to combat the threat from private label at a time when consumers are trading down through a greater focus on product development close to consumer needs.
3. Strong marketing focus - Colgate-Palmolive’s strategy is to combine product development with strong marketing initiatives, across the globe.

4. Product offering at different pricing tiers - While the focus is on premium products, Colgate-Palmolive also aims to offer a range of products at a lower pricing tier ?in case consumers are looking to trade down.

Market Assessment

- Colgate-Palmolive is too focused on oral care, which generates around 63% of its total revenue. While the company is the global leader in oral care, with nearly a quarter of value sales, oral care is also one of the most mature categories with its percentage growth projection below that of the industry average over 2009-2014.
- Its three other categories following oral care are bath and shower, hair care and deodorants, respectively. Colgate-Palmolive has a good presence in Brazil bath and shower, one of the markets to drive growth in this category, but has yet to penetrate China and India, two other strategic markets to drive absolute growth in bath and shower.

- Colgate-Palmolive will also benefit from expanding in deodorants, which has a robust growth projection. Competitive pressure is strong with not only Unilever controlling the market, but also players, such as Beiersdorf and L'Oréal, making the category their key priority.

Category and Geographic Opportunity

- Deodorants is Colgate-Palmolive's fourth largest category in beauty and personal care, but the company's sales are predominantly derived from the US market, at nearly 30% of its global category sales. SWOT of Colgate

SWOT – Colgate-Palmolive

Core brand equity

- The company's eponymous brand enjoys a strong level of consumer recognition. This equity is invaluable in terms of gaining leverage in new markets, while loyalty is key in core sales areas.

Winning on the ground

- Colgate-Palmolive has coined a strategy called 'winning on the ground', which means offering products based on consumer needs and communicating the benefits through various marketing strategies including free samples and the internet.

Narrow product focus

- Oral care accounts for nearly two thirds of Colgate-Palmolive's beauty and personal care revenue. It is vulnerable to a downturn in this highly mature category, which does not lend itself easily to innovation.

Mass-market

- A strong market position for the company adds value to its brand. Hence, Colgate is vulnerable to label, discount, and imitators.

Threats

Deodorants offers good opportunity

- Amongst the categories the company is present in, deodorants has the strongest growth projection, although this is toned down by mature markets, but AP and ME&A will grow above the market rate.

Intimate Hygiene in bath and shower

- Intimate hygiene recorded strong growth in both Brazil and China, but Colgate-Palmolive has no significant presence in this category. It may consider launching intimate hygiene to gain more from these markets projected to drive absolute growth.

Challenge from P&G

- With a stalwart such as Procter & Gamble looking to expand globally in more prospective markets, Colgate faces strong competitive challenges and needs to continue investing in product development.

Rising costs

- The downturn in spending is forcing a number of trade down market brands. Colgate is at risk from

LinkedIn Insights for Unilever

Lateral Movement of Employees working in Unilever

Key Insights

- Unilever's Growth in terms of Sales and Marketing is more than the Industry average, this justifies its high sales and Market Leadership position across various categories
- Unilever attracts talent from rival firms such as Kraft, Sara Lee, etc. However, after working in Unilever people generally go in for Consulting Organizations like Accenture, this shows the expertise they gain in the organization specifically in Supply Chain and Logistics

Insights for Colgate

Lateral Movement of Employees working in Colgate

Key Insights

- Colgate spends quite less on R&D and hence prefers Acquisitions as preferred mode of expansion
- However, the striking feature here is the shrinking employee growth rate in Colgate in Sales and Marketing as compared to its competitors

Insights for P&G

Lateral Movement of Employees working in P&G

Key Insights

- P&G's personnel growth in Sales and Marketing as well as R&D is quite less
- An interesting trend is the movement of employees from P&G into Hewlett Packard which is a core Technology Firm, this shows strong Technology Adoption Culture being followed in P&G

Insights for Beiersdorf

Lateral Movement of Employees working in Beiersdorf

Key Insights

- Beiersdorf has been steadily reducing Personnel growth in its R&D department, hinting at heightening M&A Activity

Insights for Henkel

Lateral Movement of Employees working in Henkel

Key Insights

- Henkel has an increased spend in Research and Development Activities which shows that strategies are directed towards product innovations
- The attrition rate is low, that shows that Henkel is trying its best to retain its employees and job satisfaction is high

Recommendations

Key Geographies for Deodorant Market

Western Europe

- Germany ? It has the highest spend per capita in the world for deodorants. With a stable growth rate in the next 4 years, Germany remains an important place to have a presence. As Sanex already is there in Germany, with Unilever's Sales and Marketing experience can take this brand even further ahead.
- UK ? Next best country after Germany for spend per capita. Usage is very high and is a part of daily habit. This market is exploited by many big and small players but still keeps the scope of new entrants with new product innovations. As people are very aware and used to deodorant as a category, continues new ranges and product innovation is where lies the key.

Eastern Europe

In Eastern Europe Colgate has its presence with Mennen and Palmolive deodorants. But with no new product innovation in last few years and very less spent on marketing, these brands were ignored to an extent by Colgate. As per a report published on Colgate acquiring Sanex, one major reason behind this acquisition was to get R&D capabilities in Deodorant market which Colgate lacked initially.

- Poland ? Part of eastern market, which is growing at very high rate in the context of deodorants, Poland has the highest spend per capita, and an increasing projected value growth in deodorant markets.
- Russia ? Russia, because of the population is expected to have a high volume for deodorant sales, though it has low spend per capita, but the projected growth trend is stable and promising.
- Hungary ? Expected to grow in next two years but may get stagnant after that because of very low spend per capita on deodorants

Consumer Insights

- Women still remain the driving point behind men using personal care items, thus the positioning should always be around attraction and sex appeal
- One of the biggest turn off among women is men with dangling white residue from their underarms. No product in Europe till date is tackling this problem, and it can be treated as a new product innovation to invest into
- In Russia, preserving femininity is of key importance, hence becomes the weak point to sell personal care products to Russian women
- Secondary research on consumer behavior insights will be backed by Primary Research in key European markets

Brand Positioning

- The key challenge for Colgate is that the parent company Colgate Palmolive is considered as a brand and not as a parent company with umbrella brands.
- Nine out of ten people consider Colgate as an Oral care brand and not as a personal care brand.
- As Oral care market is almost saturated and with Colgate having plans in exploring more categories, it becomes even more challenging.
- Branding its individual brands separately is the biggest challenge Colgate is facing, the marketing attempts should be more focused to strengthening the Individual brands, being distributed by Colgate Palmolive, like in the case of P&G, Unilever and Reckitt.
- Colgate is known for its continues innovations, and now after acquiring Sanex R&D Capabilities, Colgate can explore newer markets and also can strengthen its existing brand ? Mennen and Palmolive.

Tough Sanex brand positioning is also related to its premiumness, Sanex does not provide the emotional value to the customer. The positioning need to work upon and category may need to be chosen. As In deodorant brands multiple variants are possible, marketing tricks can be used to brand them separately in different markets as per needs

- As per the positioning map there are two major emotional spaces, where there is good scope of growth and can be used to create a stronger positioning for that segment

1) Sporty Appeal ? Adidas being only player working in the category, and as per the consumer behavior report, Sports deodorants acted as a trigger in the deodorant sales, Sanex can have a variant in this category to cater the segment

2) Masculine Emotional Space ? Old Spice acts as an old premium brand in this category for last many years. Sanex (as it being a non premium brand) can launch a variant in this category as a mass brand, and can target those who aspire for masculine appeal
